A NOTE ABOUT THE DECEMBER PROGRAM:
The program titled, "The Division of the Union" is a DVD program from the American Philatelic Society. The program was created by the late Bob Davidson, who was president of the Chattanooga Stamp Club from 2003 to 2005. Bob passed away in 2007. He had been editor of the newsletter, and always promoting philately and the Chattanooga Stamp Club.

DECEMBER MEETING:
The December meeting is designated as the annual meeting. At this meeting, the election of officers is to be held by secret ballot. The decision to postpone the Christmas dinner to January was made after discussion of schedules and activities over the coming holidays.

For January:
STAMP OF THE MONTH

Don't be fooled by its size. A tiny little stamp can cause big trouble. Case in point: This stamp issued by Nicaragua in 1937. Not uncommonly, the stamp featured a map of the country, but it included a large section of land also claimed by neighboring Honduras. Ownership of the region had long been in dispute between the two countries and remained a source of great contention. In 1906, King Alfonso XIII of Spain decided the matter in favor of Honduras, but Nicaragua refused to acknowledge the decision. Tensions grew in the following years, so when Nicaragua released the stamp in 1937, Hondurans were outraged. Government officials, newspapers, and radio stations demanded the stamps be recalled and destroyed. Nicaraguan authorities, however, refused and insisted the map was correct. They also pointed out that they had the courtesy to label the area on the stamp as territorio en litigio. Regardless, in a matter of weeks, anti-Nicaraguan demonstrations erupted in the Honduran capital of Tegucigalpa. Across the border, Nicaraguan radio announcers called for military action, demanding the national army be sent to guard the border region. The public even began a donation drive designed to fund more planes to build up the Nicaraguan Air Force.

At the last minute, the United States, Costa Rica, and Venezuela intervened to defuse the conflict before it escalated into war. Both countries agreed to withdraw their armed forces from the disputed area and stop mobilizing troops. And, naturally, the peace agreement called for withdrawing the offending stamps. They evidently remained in circulation, however, until supplies in private hands ran out. The example shown was postmarked in 1941—four years after their forced recall.

If you have not paid the 2016 membership dues, this is to remind you that the dues are only $10.00. See Carl Anderson to take care of this.

UNIVERSAL SHIP CANCELLATION SOCIETY

The Universal Ship Cancellation Society, Inc., (APS Affiliate #98), a non-profit, tax exempt corporation, (IRS 501(c)(3)) founded in 1932, promotes the study of the history of naval vessels, naval postal markings, and other postal documents involving the U.S. Navy and other maritime organizations of the world. Members of the society typically collect naval covers. Some members are primarily interested in cachets, some are primarily interested in postmarks, and some are interested in both. Some members conduct research in their areas of interest and publish their findings through the Society. Such reference material is then available for all collectors. Many members share an interest in naval covers as well as an interest in naval or maritime history. The Society’s monthly journal, the Log, contains a blend of these two interests.

The U.S.C.S. Log (ISSN 0279-6139), the official publication of the Universal Ship Cancellation Society, Inc, is published monthly.

Protecting Your Valuable Investment
by Bob Davidson

Most of us treasure our collections. You undoubtedly consider yours at least as dear as any item of comparable value you own. That is because it is unique. Over time you have added items of both individual significance and value; and you have assembled areas of specialty that took years to accomplish. In short, your collection is irreplaceable. Should it be lost to theft or water damage for example, it cannot be reassembled. Replacing the irreplaceable is not the point of this article.

But what if your collection is lost..... Is its value protected? You undoubtedly have homeowners or household effects insurance. Does that insure your collection? Probably not, advises my insurance agent; not unless it is included as scheduled property. Even then it must first be appraised and each individual item listed. What's more, the premium rate will most likely be several multiples of other insured property such as household furnishings. Your homeowners carrier doesn't even want to insure your collection because they have no good way to value a loss; so they make coverage expensive and complex to obtain.

What of mailing or shipping all or part of your collection - for example to have a stamp expertised, to send an exhibit for display, or to sell or purchase an item? What then?? We refer to two recent articles in Linn's to address this. First the USPS allows insurance on philatelic items only if no first class material is enclosed. That is if it can be mailed as package service. The Postal Service considers invoices, statements, application forms.....as 'having the character of personal correspondence' and must be sent first class. Your mail clerk may not be familiar with this ruling and may accept or even offer an insurance option. All this does is maybe give your mailing a little special attention - good luck collecting if you have a loss. FedEx will not even accept philatelic material for transport (officially), much less insure it. Actually, according to the Linn's article, FedEx has a don't ask, don't tell policy. I wonder what they do when you have to tell, as in making a claim. UPS, Airborne, and most other major shippers will accept (and insure) collectable stamps, although liability limits may be imposed.

Not long ago I purchased a White Plains souvenir sheet that was shipped to me by UPS. It made it to Knoxville, and then disappeared. Fortunately the item was covered either by the seller's private insurance or by UPS - at any rate though I lost the souvenir sheet, I had no financial loss. So lest you think shippers are infallible I assure you losses do occur.

So what is a poor collector to do to avoid a compound intrinsic and financial loss? Fortunately there is financial protection available - at a price that beats your homeowners company. There are companies that specialize in insuring highly valuable items. One of these that covers philatelic material is Hugh Wood - from whom insurance is available to APS members at very favorable rates, and no inventory is required (though your own inventory would be needed in the event of a loss). This is one of the benefits of APS membership that some overlook. (If it sounds like I am promoting APS membership, maybe I am).

The loss of all or part of our collection is not something we wish to contemplate, but as I experienced on a small scale with the White Plains sheet, bad things happen. Maybe these thoughts will give you pause to ensure against financial loss of a precious possession.
